

Meridian South

Redevelopment of the former Hither Green hospital in Lewisham has provided a new residential quarter as well as new community facilities including shops, crèche and doctors' surgery and affordable housing for London's key workers. Uniquely, the site is positioned on the Meridian Line giving rise to its new name and also providing the opportunity to recognise the significance of its location through the positioning of a series of ground plaques. The scheme has involved the restoration of a Victorian water tower to its former glory which is now being used as a Police satellite office, adding to the security of the local area.
